I was born and raised in the Dandenong Ranges from the late 70's, and attended both primary and high school in that area. Growing up, I did not have any form of learning one single thing in regards to this, or any countries, First Nations People , which is horribly sad and unfortunate, considering the beautiful area where I grew up, and the hugely historical and expansive Original Land Owners stories I am now aware of. My father was a yuk human, big racist , especially against Mob. As I grew old enough to understand how much of a terrible person he was, and over the years, realising the land I stood on had such rich history, I decided to learn as much as I could personally, yet I know there is still so much more , and I will continue to listen and learn .. I am unsure if this would be classed as an injustice to myself, I suppose in a sense it was, but it is definitely one of the largest injustice' to the people who lived on this country for hundreds of thousands of years before white colonisers arrived
